Accreditation and Assessment of Journalism Education in Europe

Quality Evaluation and Stakeholder Influence

Nomos

Journalism chronicles daily events and acts as a seismograph of society. It focuses attention and moderates the public debate. Journalism enjoyed an undisputed position for a long time, but this has changed in recent years: digital media, a shift in the requirements of the audience and an increasing economic pressure have led to radical change. At the same time, the importance of the media as a whole in society is on the rise, and journalism is the driving force behind this trend of mediatisation. The series of publications entitled 'AKTUELL' contains research which examines this reorientation of journalism and provides a forum for academic debate. It collates research which analyses all the facets of journalism both theoretically and empirically, provides impulses for the practice of journalism and contributes to the public discussion on its role in our media society.
