Acknowledgments

This study is the result of a pivotal period in my life, both personally and academically, and I embrace the opportunity to thank the people who have accompanied and supported me along the way.

Since the book began as a dissertation, my first thanks go to the academic environment at the University of Chicago's Department of Germanic Studies, which enabled me to develop and advance my topic, and, first and foremost, to my doctoral advisers. I thank Christopher J. Wild for his insistence on accuracy in interpretation, historical reference, and argumentation, which has challenged me to hone and broaden my capacities for all three. I am also grateful to David E. Wellbery, who I was privileged to call a teacher and mentor in my first days at Chicago, and whose virtuosity and passion for engaging with literature and philosophy beyond disciplinary boundaries have had a lasting influence on my self-understanding as a scholar. Special thanks go to David J. Levin, who not only opened my eyes to a theoretically informed view of historical and contemporary theatre practices, and thus to an area of interest that still characterizes my work today, but whose animated scholarship – as thoughtful as it is generous – has become a model for me. And I shall not forget to mention my friends and colleagues, to whom I will always remain indebted for their constant interest and intellectual and personal support: Leigh Ann Smith-Gary, Nicole Jerr, Hannah Eldridge, Amy Stebbins, Malika Maskarinec, Katharina Loew, Anthony Mahler, Stephen Halswell Todd, Joshua Bonilla, and Peter Erickson.

Deepest thanks go to my colleagues at the Institute of Philosophy and Sciences of Art at Leuphana University in Lüneburg, who in recent years have inspired me to expand my thinking and methodology. Above all, I want to thank Beate Söntgen, who has not only tirelessly encouraged me in my work and scholarly approach, but who has also provided me with substantial support for the publication of this book. I would also like to express my special thanks to Gabriele Brandstetter and Clemens Risi for including my study in the »Scenae« series with Rombach Wissenschaft – I could not wish for a better context for this book, and Friederike Wursthorn for her warm support at Nomos publishing. Finally, profound thanks go, once again, to my dear friend and colleague Leigh Ann Smith-Gary, whose astute and precise edits and comments have contributed greatly to the final stages of preparing this book.

Acknowledgments

My personal thanks go to Tan Wälchli, who has been my partner in countless conversations about the material that fills these pages – conversations from which arguments and, ultimately, chapters emerged; and to our daughter Eliane, who demonstrates the inexhaustible powers and delicate plasticity of our imagination every day.
